In our fourth of five webinars, our speakers will discuss legacy business conversions into cooperatives and how existing micro-business can work together in cooperative ways.

SHEVANTHI DANIEL-RABKIN
Shevanthi is the Co-Director of the Cooperative Conversions program at the Democracy at Work Institute. Her work spans over 15 years in community and labor organizing, and strategic capacity building with nonprofit and small businesses. She previously served as Lead Manager of Worker Cooperative Initiative at Pinchot University - Center for Inclusive Entrepreneurship and helped develop a Cooperative Management Certificate program.

SOYUN PARK
Soyun is an organizer, a trainer, an organization builder, and a movement strategist. She has over 25 years of experience with youth and community organizing in Black and Brown communities to affect local, state, and national policy change on racial and economic justice issues and immigrant rights issues. Over the last few years, Soyun has been focused on community economic development, working with owner operator micro businesses fighting predatory development in Washington, DC.
